Friends of United States of Europe Show Reduction of Military Burden

Because of the growing interest in the proposal for a United States of Europe, The Christian Science of Europe, The Unition Science Monitor has arranged for a seriex of articles on the subject from the pen of a competent observer. The articles coper many phases of the subject, and, provide the groundwork for an understanding of the reasons for the appearance and power of the whole movement.
The seventh article appears below.

By PAUL HUTCHINSON GENEVA-The principal influence supporting the formation of a United States of Europe is industrial. It is the idea of some sort of customs union, giving business a free continent within which to develop, that has taken hold of the imagination of the European business man and made him the chief champion of this move ment. But it is not only as an economic factor that many European leaders find importance in the proposal. They hope that a United States of Europe will, if formed, prove equally helpful in solving a large number of the political and social problems that now appear insoluble.

More experts were employed in drafting the Treaty of Versailles than have ever participated in any similar undertaking. Each of the negotiating delegations came to that conference accompanied by-one is tempted to say surrounded with-expert advisers on every possible question that could arise. In most cases these men did their work with an honest desire to see a treaty drafted that would be generally accepted as just, and that would stand without serious modifi-cation as a permanent basis for a peaceful Europe.

Yet the Treaty of Versailles, it is now generally admitted, has opened now problems all over Europe. De-spite the reams of arguments with which the experts bolstered up their advice, it is evident that many of the solutions of the treaty were not real solutions at all, but at the best only postponements of issues that will have some day to be faced. And during the period of postponement these questions are growing increasingly

South African Leader Faby Whites in Dominion vors Accord With Hertzog on Big Domestic Issue

LONDON — Gen. Jan Christian muts, ex-Prime Minister of South Africa, has arrived in Europe again, after an absence of six years, to deliver the Rhodes memorial lectures and to be in residence at Oxford University for the Michaelmas term, which ends in mid-December. He has received many invitations to proceed to the United States after completin his Oxford engagement, but, as leader of the South African Party in the South African Legislature, the Monitor is authoritatively informed that it will be difficult for him not to be present in Parliament, when it meets again in Cape Town early next year. The soldier statesman has come to Great Britain partly to refresh himself with new contacts with men and events in Europe, and partly to plead for a wider view of the problems of Africa. Although General Smuts is well known as a defender of native rights, he is also a profound believer in the necessity for leadership of the white man in the development of Africa. He wants Africa, or at least the healthy eastern and southern high-lands, settled by Europeans, for he is convinced that, left to himself, the African native will lapse back into stagnation, which, he says, throughout history has been characteristic of the Negro in Africa, and that for the progress of Africa, not the missionary and the civil servant alone are necessary, but the settler, the business man and organizer of economic enterprise as well.

For Continuing Rhodes Policy Not the least important work which General Smuts hopes to accomplish on his visit, the Monitor is able to state, is to induce Great Britain to resume that forward movement in the settlement and development of Africa which Cecil Rhodes had so much at heart, and which he beince Connie Mack first took control lieves is not less important, under but the veteran pilot's familiar score of what was once known as "the dark

EXPRESS ROADS URGED TO SOLVE MOTOR PROBLEM

Street Widening Costly and Slow, Planner Tells Civil Engineers

Solution of the traffic problem is not to be found in the widening of existing streets, but in the construction of great express roads, Robert Whitten, president of the American City Planning Institute, New York, and Boston City Planning consultant, told the conference of the American ociety of Civil Engineers at the Hotel Statler here.

"Express roads constitute the only way to supply the volume, safety, comfort and speed which traffic to-day requires," Mr. Whitten said. "Street widening is not only too costly a project, but it will never catch up to the rapidly increasing

The need for a body of city planners endowed with sufficient authority to prepare a comprehensive regional plan in all phases of the work was stressed by Arthur C. He pointed out that the plan of Greater Boston has practically been dictated by the state Legislature-a result of the location of

"In signing the Paris peace pact fifty-six nations have declared that program of world peace, an agreewar shall not be used as an instrument of national policy. Promoting World Peace

"The part of each of our governments in the promotion of world peace will be different, as the one will never consent to become entangled in European diplomacy and the other is resolved to pursue a policy of active co-operation with its European neighbors; but each of our governments will direct its thoughts and influence toward securing and maintaining the peace of the world. "Our conversations have been largely confined to the mutual relations of the two countries in the light of the situation created by the signing of the peace pact. Therefore, in a new and reinforced sense, the two governments not only declare that war between them is unthinkable, but that distrusts and suspicions arising from doubts and fears which may have been justified before the peace pact must now cease to influence national policy. We approach old historical problems from a new angle and in a new atmosphere, on the assumption that war between us is bahished, and that conflicts between our military or naval forces cannot take place. These problems have changed their meaning and character, and their solution, in ways satisfactory to both countries, has become possible. Detailed Study Required

"We have agreed that those questions should become the subject of active consideration between us. They involve important technical matters requiring detailed study. One of the hopeful results of the visit which is now terminating officially has been that our two governments will begin. A further question on the agenda deals with the minimum requirements in regard to the professional capacity of the responsible officers on board ship, which affects the safety of the entire crew.

BY RADIO FROM MONITOR BUREAU LONDON-Ben Tillett, secretary of the Transport and General Workers Union, has left London to attend the conference. Despite a special con-ciliation visit to London by Albert Thomas, director of the International Labor Office, the sailors refuse to recede from the attitude they had taken that the British delegate be appointed by the Seamen's Union. The result is that neither they nor the ship-owners who supported the Union's stand, will be represented at the conference.

The abstention is not only likely to have a harmful effect on the deliberations at Geneva, but may have liberations at Geneva, but may have repercussions at home, since the action of the union is in a sense an act of rebellion against the Trade Union Congress, which the seamen only rejoined a few months ago, after having remained aloof since the days of the general strike.

The native question cannot be solved by such heroic measures. My party has always pleaded for settlement by consent, away from bitterness and prejudices of party politics. Unfortunately at the last election the Government made a party issue of the native question and tried to stampede the people on the cry that the South the people on the cry that the South Africa Party was out to make a black South Africa, in which the white man's future would be in danger. Flowers on the Desk

American Beauty rose set in a tall vase on top of a mahogany desk. Skirting that stately bud lay a scattered confusion of books and papers, all reminders of a crowded day brought to a close.

The visitor's glance lingered for a moment on the graceful lines of the rose, but long enough to draw from the executive a word of explanation.

explanation.

"I suppose you're wondering why a blunt business man keeps a flower on his desk," he said. "Well, I haven't any sentimental reasons. I simply like to watch the petals unfold. A rose is constantly changing. It always brings a touch of beauty, even on a foggy day."

The visitor went away with rather a fair notion of the personality of a man who is not too immersed in the welter of the day's work to give attention to a flower upon his desk.

Somehow it is just such a homely incident as this that reveals human nature "with the hood up." Flowers that deck the yard with riotous pageantry of color tell something of the family living within the house. A tenement window box, gay with geraniums, petunias and spreading ferns, sends signals to the passing throngs below that beauty has found lodgment within somber walls thrust against a sky smudged with factory smoke.

Flowers on the desk? Certainly! what particular flower do you like best in your home or office?

Fifteen of the 29 players to whom Dr. Wilce awarded letters have returned. In addition 23 men have come up from the 1929 freshman, and it is upon these that Willaman places his hopes. Prominent among the veterans to return is Wesley E. Fesler 30, highly rated end. Fesler in the parly practice sessions appears to have emproved greatly.

Oregon Still looms one of the strongest teams in the Northwest, though Stanford registered 26 first downs to Oregon's three. The Cardinals amassed 322 yards from scrimmage and 231 from passes to Oregon's 36 yards from scrimmage and 94 yards from passes. These figures give some idea of the driving power of Coach G. S. Warner's team that Southern California must stop to retain her title, and the eleven that West Point meets at Palo Alto in a post-season game. Oregon was very nearly held scoreless, A long pass, J. And what a giory for the League!

The fans of Chicago have the impression that the Philadelphia players are playing as much for Connie Mack as they are for anything else in this as they are for anything else in this as they are for anything else in this series. Whenever a teammate did anything out of the ordinary they came out of their blankets to applaud with a vigor that made up for the absence of Philadelphia fans in the stands. The home runs by Foxx and Simmons brought them from the bench almost in a body, the two hitters being forced to push through a crowd of handshaking players. Many World Series have been played and usually the club that shows the sparkle and boyish glee over victory wins. If that boyish glee over victory wins. If that is the case, the Athletics should win. They have those qualifications. Cubs Are Below Form.

In the midst of defeat, however, a lub always looks worse than it is. The Cubs have not received the pitching and airtight defense which have characterized their play in the regular season. They have got away on the wrong foot, as the fans say, Known as they are for their ability to come back, the opportunity to match the performance of the Cardinals of 1926, are held out to them. The pitching of the Athletics has completely baffled the great hitting quartet of the Cubs most of the time.

game was 21, tying the World Series record made in 1906, which was the series between the two Chicago clubs. If the series keeps on in the way it has started, something of a far more impressive nature than that already recorded will go down in the pitchers' records. And this is the series in which two of the greatest destructive hitting teams in baseball history are represented. The score:

GERMANY FEELS COMPETITION OF

Ruhr Owners Have Also Had to Face Recent Rise in Railway Freights

SPECIAL TO THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITO BERLIN-The report of the Rhenish-Westphalian Coal Syndicate for 1929, has just been issued. The sales ish and south German areas. recorded during the period in question show a marked falling off as compared with the previous period. As the boom at that time was largely caused by the great coal strike in England and its consequences, this development is looked on as a not unnatural one.

In all markets, both in Germany and abroad, the Ruhr Coal Syndicate is now, according to the report, feel-ing the competition of British coal more and more. Under these circumstances, as might be expected, the Syndicate is more anxious than ever that an understanding with the Brit-ish coal industry should be arrived at on some international basis.

The Ruhr Coal Syndicate says that it even seems as if the probability of international understanding with the British coal industry is less than it was 12 months ago, the reason being that the British coal industry has during the past year made considerable progress not only in applying the system of trustification but also in rationalizing the industry, to say nothing of improvements in laid by each, transport and taxation concessions which have been granted to it by the British Government. The Ruhr owners, on the other hand, says the report, have had to face a rise in railway freights in Germany during the period under review. In criticizing the policy of the Ger-

Poultry Farms Start on Pan-Soviet Scale

LONDON-L. M. Khinchuk, Soviet Deputy Commissar of Trade, intends during the coming winter to organize poultry farming on a "Pan-Soviet scale," according to a Times message from Riga.

The Commissariat of Agriculture, which recently drew up an elaborate scheme to make good the scarcity of meat by rearing rabbits as a state enterprise, has now concluded a contract with the Congress of Pioneer Children (the "Red" Boy Scouts), conferring on them the title of "Pa-trons of Poultry-Rearing," in return for which the Pioneers took a solemi oath to regard the hens of Soviet Russia henceforth as their special care, to provide them with nests, to watch them, and, so far as possible, keep account of the number of eggs

The Pioneers undertook to catch all land. As far as the eye can neighborhood. During such hunting the best hens and, without regard to their ownership, to send them to spe-cial "pedigree centers" to be estabished in each district.

It is officially stated that there are pproximately 120,000,000 hens in the S. S. R. today, and that owing to the absence of "controlled nests" "individual peasants" and by making outward appearance of a man.

Bulgaria Leads Way in Railway Profits

SOFIA - Bulgaria is almost the only Balkan state that can run its railroads at a profit, a fact which is partly accounted for by the big increase in the traveling public. Over 8,000,000 passengers rode on the Bulgarian trains last year and the average trip was 60 miles long. In 1914 only half as many people used the railroad service and each trip was only half as long, while 30 years ago only one person in ten rode on the cars yearly and then only for five

Last year the Bulgarian railroads received an income of over 1,000,-000,000 levs, about two-thirds of which came from freight; 750,000,000 levs went for expenses, by far the largest item in which was wases. Discovery is often exciting, but it can seldom teach and reveal so much as we learn in rediscovery. One returns home after a long absence with something like the multiplied and nuickened discernment in which one rereads a familiar book, gaining new impressions but chiefly enriching the old. The eyes that see most deeply are those that have been bathed in strangeness and come back with the advantages gained by distance to what they have always known. It is said that a man once set sail from London to explore the world, and that he saw many wonderful things on his voyage through all the climes, but the only real discovery that he made was that of the wonder of London itself as he sailed

Who sees the homeland best, most his return when his impressions are worth more than those of any other observer. Odysseus after his twenty years of toil and wandering far from me looked at his little rocky Ithaca, we may be sure, with devouring eyes, Marco Polo, slipping into Saint Mark's Basin one morning after a long so-journ in Cathay, saw that vision of journ in Cathay, saw that vision of the Piazza and Duomo, fragile as a dewdrop and colored like the wreck of a rainbow, as none of the stay-athome Venetians had ever seen it. No one who has had a similar experience can fail to thrill in sympathy with Joachim du Bellay's famous sonnet, even when reading it in a crude sort of disorderly lounging strength. even when reading it in a crude translation: "Happy is the man who, like Ulysses or he that captured the golden fleece, has made a long voyage and has then returned, rich in memories and in thought, to dwell among his own for the rest of his something not fully revealed essentiate.

Happy indeed is such a man, not only because the stress of travel is now over and because he is now greeting old friends but for the fur-ther reason that he seems for a time that draws the heart. And if he reto be set above the lower stations m which other men take their partial views. His "patriotism," in every good sense of the word, is probably keener than ever before, yet he smiles down upon the petty prejudice with which some of his compatriots seek to justify their love of country. They cannot love their country too getting home again." This was once a paradox with a touch of ironic epigram, but it is also a fact of experience discovered anew by thousands in every year. If the love of home is growing and local patriotism increasing among us in these days, as many signs indicate that they are, one of the reasons may be the steady increase of travel far and wide. The excursions of a wise travwide. The excursions of a wise trav- ture, manners, rhythms of movement, the very look of the faces that he luring his affections astray, do but bind him closer to the scenes that his infancy knew; and indeed he might even go away from home with sharply, perhaps for the faces that he sees in the streets, are at once familiar and strange; and their strangeness compels him to observe them sharply, perhaps for the first time. his infancy knew; and indeed his sharply, perhaps for the first time. He feels with delight that he is part and parcel of all that he sees about his at the same time he can the deliberate and primary intent of the same time he can preserve for a little while the imparpreserve for a little while the imparational of the spectator. Not only does the homecoming traveler see more deeply into familiar things than strangers can ever see and more discerningly, too, than those who are dulled by custom; he sees with an affection that can be attained, perhaps, only by temporary separation. For months, or it may be for years, he has been remember ing the sights and sounds of home with an ever-increasing sense of devotion, and out of such devotion as If he is returning to America, let us say after two years or more abroad the first few weeks following his arrival are a constant succession of surprises and little shocks of delight. There is a brief period just following his return when his impressions are gether with broad and apparent ica alone would never have taught him. For the first time, it may be, he realizes that the sort of disorderly lounging strength. This that he has before him is a bluff, hearty, virile land, not yet subcomething not fully revealed, essentially poetic. It is a country, he feels assured, in which many poets will yet sing many noble songs, for there turns in the autumn so as to see the wave of color surge up from the crimson sumacs into the golden hick ories and on to the maples robed in scarlet splendor, then he knows to the full the brave dreaming heart of his own land.

Such a man, during his years abroad, has been trying to fit himself into a picture already painted; here he is given his chance to make a picture of his own. Here he is no longer a mere spectator but a participant. He may have stood to gaze before a thousand celebrated land-scapes of Europe, admiring and even thrilled by each in turn; but here the beloved country reaches out her maternal arms and takes him to herself. This is somewhat different from cold spectatorial admiration. This is the

They have started out together In the bright October sunshine,

For the last of summer's rambles:

For the long work of the winter;

Of her mountains and her streams.

Starting rabbits 'neath the nut trees

Dropping down their russet burdens-As they pick and laugh and pass.

And I hear their voices calling

To the dogs which follow after.

Turning yellow in the sunlight,

And I hear them as they murmur

And their voices sift like bells,

Of the softly falling years

On the scented, thymey turf;

Of the halls so soon to claim them;

Slipping gently down the passage

Dreaming of the great hereafter,

And the earth within their grasp.

Now the sun has sunk in splendor;

Improved Industrial Outlook and Easier Credit Help to Boost Prices

NEW YORK (A) - The unexpected increase of nearly 245,000 tons in the September unfilled orders of the United States Steel Corporation, announced at noon today, brought a flood of buying orders into the stock mar-of buying orders into the stock market, and sent prices whirling upward as panic stricken shorts rushed to cover their commitments.

United States Steel common ran up 12½ points, and scores of other issues were marked up 3 to 12 points, some of them having showed losses in the early trading.

Meanwhile, call money again dropped from 6 to 5 per cent, and time money was in fair supply at 8½ per cent for all maturities.

Wall Street was counting on a large decrease in Federal Reserve brokers loans to be announced after the close, but these weekly statements have provided so many disappointments in the past that several traders took advantage of the rally to lighten their com-past that several traders took advantage of the rally to lighten their commitments. One of the largest brokerage houses in the Street also urged its customers who had carried stocks through last week's break with paper losses to reduce their holdings.

In view of the recent decline in steel output and the reported falling off in the demand for steel from the automotive and building industries, most speculators were not looking for any large increase in the United States Steel Corporation's tonnage. In the short space of two hours, Steel common gained more than it lost in any full session of last yeek's declining markets. Other steels rallied in sympathy. Republic gaining 5 points.

Bonds Continue Gains

The bond market extended its gains oday under the favorable influence of the relatively easy money rates, Gains were most consistent in the rails, especially the low coupon mortgages, but there was also a slight revival of interest in United States Government Libertys and Treasury's at higher prices

Bradstreet's, Oct. 12, will say: "For the fifth month in succession aggregate building permit values in September at 215 leading cities fell off from the like month a year ago, and for the first month since February, 1922, the total for the month just closed dropped below $200,000,000. It may be added that the nine month's total of building is the smallest for that period since 1923. Explanations for this are various, but among the leading reasons are to be mentioned the high price or scarcity of money for building, and, secondly, the feeling that in many cities demand for construction, this taken as a whole, is not strong enough to induce builders to pay the rates of interest demanded on this class of loans."

ROCK ISLAND'S VALUATION

Asset value of Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railway common stock based on Interstate Commerce Commission's valuation brought up to Aug. 21, 1929, is $167.50 a share. On commission's valuation for Rock Island and the Chicago, Rock Island & Gulf, plus additions and betterments through August last, the system could earn $15.70 a share on common before recapture would set in. The commission's valuation gave no weight to the O'Fallon decision, which stated that consideration should be given to reproduction cost new.

The passing of the summer months has had a stimulating effect on retail sales. The latest figures of the two large mail order houses show new high records established in September. While a substantial amount of the increase in the sales of the mailincrease in the sales of the mail-order houses is due to expansion into the chain store field, the agricultural sec-tion of the country continues to play an important rôle in the success of these merchandising organizations. CHICAGO—Price is more a factor in lion and steel markets here. Although many users of heavy finished steel have contracted for the fourth quarter at 2.05 cents, which carried over from the third quarter, the softness in the eastern markets has created some uncertainty.

Unless the $1 a ton concession developed by some users in the East result in a general revision of contracts, local commitments are expected to stand.

Southern pig-iron producers have again made a foray at $13, base, Birmingham, taking fair business in the Milwaukee as well as Chicago districts. This low price, it is claimed, is to be withdrawn shortly. Small sales of Lake Superior charcoal and silvery pig iron under the market are reported. Northern foundry and malleable iron are unchanged at $20. Iron and steel steel markets, and the heaviest order week since 1920 results. Little of the 20,000 tons of tank work on finquiry has been closed. Nail and wire demand has slumped, and prices are no factor either way. Strip steel mills notice the lack of automotive industry specifications. Deliverles on almost all products have greatly im-

Faithful Laddie

(From the Portland Oregonian)

DURING the fire which burned over 160 acres of secondgrowth timber, wiped out the Columbia Logging Company, and devastated the small town of Greenleaf on the bank of the Columbia River 15 miles west of Stevenson, Laddie a shepherd dog did some

Laddie, a shepherd dog, did some

On Monday afternoon the fires were raging along the slopes of Hamilton mountain and along Wood-ard Creek. Flames which hit the green firs roared like a mighty furnace. Here between these two walls of flame a band of 1100 sheep which had been grazing so peacefully a short time before were suddenly

C. H. Craig, his brother-in-law, Harry Patrick, and Mrs. Craig (who had come up to camp for a short outing) were tending the sheep with their two dogs, Laddie and Cap. Lad-true sheep dog. "Cap is good, too," said Mrs. Craig, "but he hasn't the faithfulness of Laddie."

the sheep out of the mountains. Billie wouldn't budge, even though dragged and coaxed in every way known to sheep men. The road led directly into the path of flames, and after hours of unceasing and useless efforts, the sheep were finally left near their bedding ground while the herders went for help. The brown dog, Cap, came with Mr. Craig and the others, but Laddie would not leave his charges.

When trying to return to the sheep, all progress was cut off by the roaring flames, so the party turned back.

Next morning, after the fire had passed on, the rescuers went back to where they had left the sheep the day before, but found no trace of them whatever, so they determined to con-

Imagine their rejoicing when about a quarter-mile away a bell tinkled. Following the sound, they found all the sheep in a small ravine with a tiny stream trickling through it.

Who: EMPRESS JOSEPHINE.

Why famous: The wife of Napoleon I, hence Empress of the French. She was born on the island of Martinique Specialist in Correct Dress one of the daughters of a lieutenant in the army; and, when still a girl was married to a young nobleman the Vicomte Alexandre Beauharnais, The mother of two children, Eugène and Hortense Beauharnais, Jose-phine lived in Paris and played no inconspicuous part in the social life of the capital. Then came the Revolution and certain unfortunate circum-stances which brought upon her husband the enmity and suspicion of the Jacobin Party. After his ar-rest and execution, his wife remained for a time under the shadow; but the skies soon cleared for her, she was befriended by influential persons and reinstated in her former social prominence. Then, toward the begin-ning of his career, Napoleon met and fell in love with her.

Their civil marriage took place in March of the same year and almost immediately after Napoleon left to command the army in Italy. The fact that Napoleon's letters were frequent and affectionate, coupled with the fact that Josephine rarely replied to them, lends color to the theory that she cared more for power than for romance. Their life together was tempestuous; misunderstandings and reconciliations followed upon each other's heels. Napoleon appears to have long considered the possibility of a divorce. When he became First Consul in 1802, when the Empire was proclaimed in 1804, when the corona tion was to take place in the cathedral of Notre Dame on December of the same year, Josephine's anxiety knew no bounds. She secured phine. This he proceeded to do, in and then he would fold his ears and spite of all her pleadings. Josephine go to sleep until lunch time.

Carnival

A carnival may be defined in a gen eral way as an occasion of feasting and merrymaking: in a now less heard and quite limited sense it refers to the season of festival and revelry immediately preceding Lent. As the dispensing with meat, together with other self-denials, is regarded by some as a fitting celebration of the Lenten season, the derivation of the word is made clear, it being traced to the Latin carnem (accusative of caro), "flesh," and levare, "to re-

Our spelling of the word is bemoaned by many etymologists who quite plausibly insist that it should rather be "carnaval," "carnoval," or "carneval." In explanation of this, they point out that the word was introduced into our language directly from the French carnaval, and that the French had taken the word from the Italian carnovale. The next ster back was the late Latin carneleva-men; this form, however, was subsequently shortened to carnevale, a change based on the popular misconception that the word was derived from the Italian carne, "flesh," and vale "farewell."

Car'-ni-val is accented on the first syllable; sound first a as in arm, i as in it, second a as in account.

Progressive Trades Unionism

7ITH the convening of the American Federation of Labor in its forty-ninth annual convention, held this year in Toronto, Can., there is automatically recorded another page in the progressive history of that organization. This page is formally and painstakingly transcribed, for it is to become, of course, a part of the permanent record. But meantime, throughout the year to come, as during the years past, there is to be written upon pages less carefully censored and supervised the popular interpretation of the acts and policies of this influential, if not actually dominant, body of skilled and unskilled workers. It is in the compiling of this possibly less sympathetic chronicle that the American Federation should, at the present time, see that no damaging or unfair entry is made.

Those now responsible for the perpetuation of the policies long defended by Samuel Gompers have given a satisfactory account of their stewardship. But they seem now to have more to do than merely to continue in the work then so well begun. The common conception of the Gompers policy was that he would countenance no affiliation of American labor unions with the avowed enemies of democratic government. Year after year he stood at the breach and held back, almost with his own strength, a threatened invasion of his ranks by Communists and the agents of those whose purpose it was to "bore from within" in an effort to break down the authority of governments and courts.

Today, in some of the states of the South, a new line of battle has been formed. Discouraged by the failure of tactics previously followed, the same enemy seems to be pursuing an offensive more open and more determined than ever before. William Green, Mr. Gompers' successor, is now the man of the hour. By experience, education and training he is as well equipped as his predecessor. Perhaps he possesses qualifications which Mr. Gompers did not enjoy. With these in abundance, he must at all times display equal courage. He must take care that he does not yield to the temptation that spells defeat for the opportunist. He must realize that even in times like this it is not wise to fight fire with fire or greed with selfishness.

The plight of the unorganized workers in some of the newer industrial centers of the South may be desperate, therefore the means to aid them must be heroic. But Mr. Green and his advisers know that the victory which they seek, and the achievement of which would be applauded by the public, cannot be gained by resorting to methods and tactics long since discarded and discredited.

Those who are cunningly and deliberately seeking to destroy whatever the Federation has accomplished in an effort to better the condition of the southern mill workers probably would welcome any decision of Mr. Green to organize strikes throughout the affected territory. Strikers, no matter by whom urged on, are almost invariably moved to destructive and inflammatory acts. It is but a step from industrial rebellion to political madness and revolution. Both spring from the same seed.

There is no need to point out to Mr. Green and the members of his governing board the duty which is theirs. But it is well at this time to realize just where the responsibility lies. The American Federation of Labor has established itself in the confidence of American employers, workers and the public generally. It has become an institution, and as such it is answerable to those whom it has shown its ability and readiness to serve.

The Apples Are Coming — —

ACK off the coast of New England, yet near nenough to get the smell of the sea, orchards are being developed in a fashion that bids fair to put the eastern states among the foremost apple-producing sections. Farmers are discovering that what was supposed to be wornout soil is really rich, and that with the application of approved methods apples as fine as may be found anywhere can be raised at a price which yields a good profit. The fact that the soil in parts is clay is no bar to the growing of excellent McIntosh Reds, or Baldwins, or Wagners, or Northern Spys. Indeed some of the finest fruit is being produced on land hitherto regarded as useless for the purpose.

Not only the soil of New England, but the atmosphere, is admirably suited to apple growing, and the point is emphasized that insect pests are less troublesome there than in some of the best apple-producing states in the country. Nor are the advantages of proximity to big markets overlooked. Apples cost 90 cents a bushel to ship from the West against 19 cents from New Hampshire to New York, an important factor to the farmer, whose profit in no small degree is governed by the cost of freight. New England, the home of the Baldwin, is beginning to learn the virtues of apple growing. Until within recent years the industry suffered from neglect. Indifference has brought its reward to the small farmer in poor crops and low land values. Haphazard methods, unpruned, unsprayed, uncared-for trees attest the lack of interest which he has shown, and the discouragement he has met with in the price offered for his apples has caused him to cease to bother. Not so with the large growers who have put the industry upon a more systematic basis, and with excellent results. To them, and to the new farmers who are bringing to the East some of the enthusiasm and enterprise of the West, primed with a determination to prove that fine apples can be grown in the East at comparatively small cost, New England is looking to point the way to a revival of the industry.

The Next Step: World Reduction

THE breath-taking rapidity with which the naval disarmament negotiations have been going forward might almost cause one to rub his eyes in amazement and pause to wonder if by any chance he could be dreaming. Happily no one is dreaming, and least of all President Hoover and Mr. MacDonald, and the glorious fact is that the outlook is altogether too good not to be true.

The time is ripe for big accomplishments. Anglo-American naval limitation is a certainty; Anglo-American naval reduction is highly probable. These are first steps highly vital highly valuable, highly encouraging, but they will not suffice to satisfy the world's newly articulate and insistent demand for greater security against war. Let us go the whole way. Let us not only limit the naval establishments, let us reduce them, and on a world-wide scale. Such must be the objective of the five-power naval conference, to which the British Government, in co-operation with the United States, has just invited France, Italy and Japan. For five years the League's preparatory commission has remained deadlocked in its efforts to achieve even a modest agreement toward disarmament, but no more so than was the Anglo-American-Japanese naval conference which came to its untimely end in Geneva in 1927. Throughout these negotiations, Anglo-American disagreement has stood as one of the chief obstacles blocking the path of disarmament progress. Today, Great Britain and the United States the British people and the American peoplehave reconciled their apparent conflicts and offer to the rest of the world a contribution of unity in behalf of naval disarmament.

While the results of the five-power conference which will meet in London in late January will in no way endanger the Anglo-American agreement, it is this conference which alone can transform a bilateral limitation of naval armaments into a world-wide reduction of naval armaments. There is no disposition on the part of either the United States or Great Britain to brush aside the particular naval requirements of France, Italy or Japan, or to set up any new machinery for dealing with the disarmament

The British note, indeed, makes it amply clear that these countries wish only to facilitate the larger task before the League of Nations, and ultimately to link land disarmament with naval reduction. But it should be the disposition of the conference to adjust the different demands for national security to the greater end of worldwide naval reduction, which in itself is one of the most important elements in national

Those Fantastic Ideas

THEN Fritz von Opel roared through the air for a mile and a quarter in the first flight ever made in a rocket-propelled airplane, he presented a picturesque contrast to another rocket which astonished Europe just one hundred years ago. The performance of the earlier day was that of the locomotive designed by George Stephenson. It was named the Rocket" because of its ability to thunder along at the stupendous rate of twenty-six' miles an hour. It is doubtful if even the most sanguine observers of that time could have envisaged the developments which were to follow in the subsequent century, Stephenson's "Rocket" demonstrated a working speed three times greater than the experts had estimated was possible. It laid the foundation for satisfactory railroad operation in England. Today it is a prized museum possession and a reproduction of it has just been made for Henry Ford's industrial collection.

How difficult it must be, then, to properly assess von Opel's flight. It is a performance which seems at present to be both hazardous and impractical. But it presents a method of propulsion that undoubtedly is capable of important refinements.

Some of the experimenters in this field seriously discuss the possibilities of using rockets to shoot mail across the Atlantic in thirty minutes. They already are well on the way to the development of a rocket fuel which eliminates the danger of fire. Radio may some day solve the problem of directing the rocket in flight, while parachutes can readily be designed to enable it to land properly. It may sound fantastic, but so was the thought of the Trans-Siberian Railroad or the transcontinental air mail service one hundred years ago.

Britain Offers a Hand to Russia

THE problem of relations with Russia has been one of the questions which has vexed the diplomacy of Europe and America ever since the Russian revolution. On one side there have been those who said that a state which was based upon the repudiation of property rights and foreign debts, which had come into being in such an orgy of carnage and repression, and which has consistently employed the resources of its Government for subversive propáganda in other countries, could not be brought into the comity of civilized nations. On the other side have been those who said it was absurd to treat a community of 150,000,000 people with a stable Government as if it did not exist, that the Government of the Tsar had been barbarous and autocratic and yet had been recognized, and that the best way of stopping propaganda and correcting the evils of Bolshevism was to establish normal relations and let the light of knowledge into Russia.

The British Labor Party, although bitterly attacked by the Communists, has always taken the second of these views. In its election manifesto it stated that one of the first things it would do if it were elected to office would be to bring about a resumption of relations with the Russian Government. It therefore caused some surprise when after its accession to power the meeting between Arthur Henderson, British Foreign Secretary, and Valerian Dovgalevsky, Soviet Ambassador in Paris, ended in apparent rupture. The Soviet Ambassador demanded full recognition as a prelude to negotiations on outstanding issues. Mr. Henderson required settlement of the outstanding issues as a prelude to full recognition.

The agreement which has been signed during the last few days, though nominally a compromise between the two positions, seems in substance to be an acceptance of the Russian contention. The official text states that "the agreement was reached in regard to the procedure to be followed on the resumption of full diplomatic relations, including an exchange of ambassadors, for the settlement of questions outstanding between the two governments as well as an agreement in regard to propaganda." These questions were defined as matters arising out of earlier treaties, debts and other claims and counterclaims, a commercial treaty and allied questions.

It is quite clear, therefore, that, subject to approval of the agreement by Parliament, ordinary diplomatic relations will be re-established between Russia and Great Britain at an early date. What practical consequences such relations will bring will depend upon the outcome of the negotiations on the many delicate issues specified in the agreement. In the meantime, apparently, propaganda is to cease.

Education Examines Itself

TATHER the small college or the large university offers the greater advantages has long been to American youths one of their hardest nuts to crack when planning for their higher education. In choosing the one, the student had to forgo the special advantages of the other. Significant trends, however, have lately come to light, showing that ways are being worked out so that a student may enjoy the combined benefits of both. In Claremont, Calif., a system of colleges is being established under a plan that keeps each within a reasonably small enrollment, so that both the institution and the student may maintain and develop their respective individualities, and so that students and professors may have the close contacts which they so much value, and at the same time enjoy the total facilities of all the colleges.

Of a somewhat different form, yet accomplishing much the same results, are opportunities offered by certain colleges which have affiliated with Columbia and by those which have federated into what is known as Western Reserve University. Working from the other directionthat is, dividing instead of combining-splitting the overgrown college or university into small units, so that contacts between students and teachers may be richer and more frequent, is the House Plan at Harvard.

These trends may be interpreted in another way. Mass education, which has ever been strenuously attacked in its factorylike form, was not brought into existence by intention; few intelligent educators of today have attempted its defense; and now, except as it may be qualified by small-unit methods, it seems to present little that is ideal. On the other hand, the large university has contributed a breadth of training and experience, and has caused facilities to be brought together on such an unlimited scale as to have won an undisputed place.

The isolated small college holds forth in diminishing glory. While still supreme in one kind of education, its scope is too limited to meet all the complex demands of this modern era of reaching out, of co-operation and of co-ordination of available means. It may be said, therefore, that mass education and the education of the isolated small college have left their pedestals and, each recognizing the values in the other, are approaching each other on a common mission, that of combining and adjusting their heretofore separated advantages.

Frequent, human and friendly contact must be possible between professor and student if scholarly attainment is to be both sane and secure. Youth may not literally sit on a log with its teacher, but, if a boy can have an occasional stroll across the campus with his professor, or chat as friend to friend over a simple informal lunch, education will have much more nearly fulfilled its definition. Couple this up, in line with the beginnings that have already been made, with the larger scholarship and research opportunities of the big institution and the result is tremendously attractive.

Random Ramblings

Miss May Lazar, research assistant of the New York Board of Education, in a paper which she has recently issued, declares that the zero problem from the point of view of understanding the processes underlying arithmetical calculations is the most frequent and troublesome difficulty with pupils, which would seem to indicate that the pupils' chief difficulties are about nothing at all. 00000

phone, cable and wireless-some observers supposed, would relegate the diplomatic representative in a foreign country to a background where, of little practical value, he would serve mostly in upholding social traditions. Instead, they have proved that a great increase in personal contacts between governments is necessary for better understanding.

"An hour of direct intercourse between responsible ministers is often worth months of written communications," Charles E. Hughes declared-when Secretary of State. At this rate several such hours, when Ramsay MacDonald, Premier of Great Britain, and Herbert Hoover, President of the United States, sit down together to compare notes on possible methods of accomplishing certain things, should have the value of many months of note writing, from which, Mr. Hughes believes, all foreign ministers long

Notes will continue to pass back and forth between nations, but they will be largely confirmatory and for permanent records. A distinct effort to get away from reliance on mechanical facilities alone is noted in recent foreign relations. Dwight Morrow, Ambassador of the United States at Mexico City, has sensed the new day to a greater degree than probably any other ambassador. When Mr. Morrow went to Mexico, the State Department's right arm was weary of much note writing on the so-called "Mexican problems." "No notes," said the new Ambassador, starting for his post, and he has kept his word. Mr. Morrow uses methods employed by the capable head of a large business concern. If he is ready to take up a matter with the Mexican Government, he makes an appointment by telephone, and in an hour or so is face to face with the man who is to speak for Mexico. Mr. Morrow also uses the telephone freely in communicating with the State Department. As a result, he completes a task in a few hours that, under the old note-dispatching régime, might never have been closed.

A picture of Ambassador Charles G. Dawes, shouting into the telephone at the American Embassy in London, "This is Charlie Dawes. Tell the Prime Minister I'm coming right over," was given by one American newspaper reporting the appointment which Mr. Dawes made with Mr. MacDonald to present President Hoover's note on naval proposals.

The organic acts under which the Department of State was established are still in force. Its duties remain to advise the President regarding the state of relations between the United States and foreign countries and to protect the interests abroad of American citizens, but great changes have been wrought in the methods used. When Thomas Jefferson was commissioned the first Secretary of State, his entire staff consisted of five clerks. Four foreign ministers resided at the seat of government and three heads of missions comprised the diplomatic corps of the United States.

Now the Secretary of State is chief of about 625 employees in the department at Washington, divided among thirty-two bureaus and offices. Fifty-five heads of foreign missions are accredited by the Government, and it has diplomatic representation in fifty-four foreign countries and consular representatives at 304 posts, with a personnel of 730 officers and 3121 other employees.

Revolutionary changes in means of communication have affected the functions of the State Department in the 138 years since Jefferson's time. Up to the invention of the telegraph, news traveled with the speed of the then existing means of transportation—the sailing ship and the new, but slow, ocean steamer. Three weeks it took to cross the Atlantic, and that was the period that elapsed before heads of governments learned of events across the sea. Notes and instructions were long, and had to be worked out to minute details, for they had to cover instructions to government agents for months ahead. Sometimes four to seven copies of a letter were sent to lessen chances of loss from capture. Sometimes ciphers and invisible ink were employed. The classical example in American history of the waste imposed by lack of quick communication is the Battle of New Orleans, fought in the War of 1812,

TMPROVED facilities of communication-telegraph, tele- | two weeks after peace was signed at Ghent, Belgiu because America did not know the war was end

Today all is changed. The telegraph instrument found its way into the Department of State, cables were laid across the Atlantic and Pacific, and later the wireless demonstrated its ability to throw messages through spaces that had seemed almost interminable. The Secretary of State has been placed within an hour's reach of his most distant agent. The necessity of long, carefully planned instructions has been displaced by a need for concise, but immediate instructions covering each incident as it occurs. instructions has been displaced by a need to immediate, instructions covering each incident as it occurs, immediate, instructions covering each incident as it occurs,

The President and the Secretary of State are surrounded by a network of telegraph lines, carrying information from the entire world. They can command instant service over 1,800,000 miles of telegraph wire and have immediate access to more than 325,000 nautical miles of cables. The telegraph office of the Department of State knows no office hours. Rarely is the operator's key silent there, for a continuous procession of messages comes from all parts of the world. When the President has something to say, two lamps at the down-town telegraph office flash. A special operator who is always on duty informs the wire chief of the fact and the wires are at once cleared for action. All lines give precedence to official government messages, which are carried far below the normal tolls for transmission. At the Secretary's elbow are experts on each geographic area-of the world, ready at a moment's notice with all information available to enable him to advise the President when instructions are to be dispatched. The President and the Secretary of State are sur the President when instructions are to be dispatched.

the President when instructions are to be dispatched.

The telegraph has also had a revolutionary effect on the machinery which the citizen uses to inform himself about foreign affairs. In the receipt of news the press is usually even a few hours ahead of the State Department, inasmuch as the latter's communications are retarded by confirmation and decoding. Within an hour after the President or the Secretary of State makes a statement to the press, a paraphrase is on the desk of every minister of foreign affairs in Europe. Foreign agents en route between the two continents see the statement posted on the ship's bulletin board within a few hours after it is made.

A remark frequently made by the Secretary of State when asked about some governmental development in Europe is, "I see it in the press. We'll no doubt hear of it later through our diplomatic channels." With the President meeting the newspaper men twice a week and the Secretary of State seeing them every day, the day of "open covenants openly arrived at" is here. A special division of the department each morning scrutinizes the American and foreign press for news items or editorials of diplomatic or commercial importance and sends a summary of them to the head of each division.

"In the earlier days, the Secretary of State had only to reckon with a few informed men; today he has to reckon with a potential Secretary of State in each citizen, and must at once justify his own interpretation of facts," Nelson T. Johnson, Assistant Secretary of State, points out. "The citizen," he declares, "will not tolerate a corrupt or influenced press. He contributes a portion of his income for the purpose of maintaining an independent press which will seek out facts wherever they exist and report them accurately to him at the earliest possible moment. He will brook no delays and resents inspired comment."

He will brook no delays and resents inspired comment."

No intrigues, deceptions or hidden purposes mark the business of the United States Department of State. "Nothing is even proposed which so far as character is concerned, could not be shouted from the housetops," in the words of Mr. Hughes. Only those dealings are withheld from the public which would, if published, tend to embarrass negotiations of other business, break the confidence reposed by other governments and individuals, or bring needless offense to other nations by exciting invidious comments not relevant to the subject.

"If the people of the United States are to be united behind the Bresident, he must have no secret from them," Mr. Johnson declares. "They must know what our foreign relations are proposed. From the very first the conduct of our foreign relations has been the concern of all the people, rather than of any individual leader or sovereign. We are peculiar among all peoples in this fact." M. H.

The records show that there were never so many young people in London working to increase their capacity as there are now, and never before was such work so regular and persistent. -Daily Telegraph (London).

Gunfire and Eggs

ONE of the great obstacles to disarmament is the difficulty of finding an alternative use for weapons. Men who cannot dispose of safety razor blades naturally shirk the question what to do with battleships and tanks, and leave them on the active list to avoid the problem. Swords can be beaten into plowshares, if report speaks truly; but swords play little part in modern warfare, and the gestion is calculated to alienate the makers of agricultural machinery, men who ought naturally to be friends of peace. It is guns, rifles, pistols, blunderbusses that are the ficulty, for they can be used in individual as as in national quarrels, and it is a favorite argument for disarmament that if you have fine weapons you are sure to use them sooner or later. People cannot be expected to leave perfectly good guns hanging indefinitely on their walls as idle as warming-pans in the summer. What is badly needed is some wholesome and productive use to which guns can be put. Target shooting is no remedy, for we do not want skillful shots. The shooting of birds and animals is said to be on the decline as a way of passing idle hours, and it may well be that the growing tendency for the camera to oust the gun in big-game hunting will spread, and that sportsmen will show their albums of rabts at all angles instead of decorating their walls with bobtails and ears.

But what, it will be asked, is the solution if shooting at objects is ruled out, for it is poor fun shooting at random nto the air. To this question an answer has now happily been found, and it comes, appropriately enough, from Sweden, the home of Nobel and his peace prize. There is a good and peaceful use for guns, and a Swedish farmer has found and proved it. The true end of guns is not murder but increased production. Like the discovery of roast pork, the great discovery of today—that gunfire i way of life,—New Outlook, stimulates hens to lay—was made by accident. The Swedish farmer, whose niche in history is now secure, observed that his hens laid exactly twice as many eggs while dynamite rock-blasting was going on in the neighborhood. When the blasting had finished, he continued the little daily dose of shock by firing a gun in the neighborhood of the henhouse, and found it just as effective as dynamite, though much cheaper. The truth seems to be that hens need waking up and live far below their capacities. The sportsmen of the future may recken their began ties. The sportsmen of the future may reckon their capacities. The sportsmen of the future may reckon their bags in eggs instead of in birds and seek speed in firing rather than aim; but the limits, if any, of the hen's capacity to respond, will not be known till some go-ahead poultry farmer makes use of machine-gun fire.—The Times

A Few Advantages of Prohibition

CHARLES FRANCIS, dean of the printing industry, has

CHARLES FRANCIS, dean of the printing industry, has written an appeal for support of President Hoover's request that everyone observe and support the prohibition law, and has mailed this appeal to the accretaries of 1200 union organizations, whose total membership comprises about 100,000 compositors and pressment requesting that the secretaries read the appeal at the next meeting with the distinct understanding that no vote is requested and that, above all, no controversy is contemplated.

Mr. Francis writes the appeal as chairman of the board, Charles Francis Press; president emeritus, Printers' League of New York; honorary member for forty years, Louisville Typographical Union; honorary member of International Printing Pressmen and Assistants' Union; and honorary member of the Chicago Typographical Union.

Stressing the fact that he has lived 'under the old regime for over sixty years in all parts of the world," and that he attributes his health at eighty-one to never having used intoxicants, Mr. Francis sums up "a few advantages" which he attributes to prohibition:

It has created employment for hundreds of thousands of the purchase of clotters automobiles and honorary

It has created employment for hundreds of thousands of men through the purchase of clothes, automobiles and houses by the money which was formerly squandered in making beasts of men. of men.
It has been the cause of labor banks coming into existence (nine of them) with many millions of dollars. Instance the one in the Printing Crafts Building of New York City with its $21,000,000. This could not have made the success it has without receivibilities.

we put $2,500,000,000 into residences last year. Seven years after prohibition the workmen in our great cities built for themselves over $4,000,000 worth of attractive cottages.

Prohibition has raised the standards of living for our workers to what in other countries is called luxurious.

Before prohibition we owned three-tenths of the wealth of the world. We now own over one-half that wealth. Infant mortality has been reduced, the tramp and the bum have gone. We have had fewer strikes and few lynchings. More than 2,500,000 lives have been saved since prohibition. Vice has been reduced in the country at large.

"Nothing would please me better," Mr. Francis concludes, "than to see all the organizations in the printing industry on the right side aiding our President and not afraid to say so."—New York Printing News.

Tolerance

IVEN though I could be sure that my truth was always Even though I could be sure that my opinions were always sound and deserving of universal acceptance, it would still remain that intolerance in regard to them would hurt the cause of truth and right-thinking vastly more than it could possibly help it. In all the long history of the world it has never happened once that any cause of truth or goodness has been helped by repression or persecution or in-tolerance. Indeed, these things have always and every-where been the greatest hindrances to and enemies of truth and goodness. If I think that my neighbor is likely to come to my way of thinking because I browbeat and abuse him, I haven't yet picked up much wisdom along the
